FANTASIES ON ORIENTAL THEMES.

339. A Rishi Calling Up a Storm.

Rishis in Chinese and Japanese mythology are human beings who have attained practical immortality and who, retired in wild places, enjoy control over nature.

340. Same subject.

A Rishi and attendant.

341. Same subject.

A group of Rishis.

342. The Strange Thing Little Kiosai Saw Floating in the River.

Kiosai, the Japanese painter, when a child saw what he took to be a Hairy Tortoise (a nursery tale fiction) floating in the swollen floods of the river. It was a severed human head to which he gave burial after making a drawing of it.

343. Li-Tai-Pé and the Waterfall.

Moonlight Effect.

Li-Tai-Pé, the famous Chinese poet, is usually represented in contemplation before a waterfall.

344. The Badger Beating His Drum.

In Japanese Folk-lore the Badger is uncanny. He is fabled to beat as a drum upon his swollen abdomen to draw unwary travellers out of the right path. The sound is not unlike that of the waterfalls he may frequent.

345. The Divinity Kuwannon.

Here represented as Goddess of the Sea and Patroness of Purity.

346. The Spirit of the Storm.

347. The Tiger-cat Butterfly. A Japanese fancy.

352. Women Bathing in a Stream running to the Sea. Tahiti. 1891.

353. Samoan Girls making in Ceremony the South Sea Drink called Kava.

"Siakumu is wringing out the strainer of bark filaments. The chief's wife Tafua is leaning on the Samoan bamboo pillow and acting as duenna. On the left is a curtain of Tappa cloth. 1890.

354. A Sitting Dance, the Siva, in Samoa.

355. In Devil or Cannibal Country, Fiji. Huts at Nasongo.

"The huts here are of mountain type, high thatch roofs twice the height of wall, on a stone base out of which grow bunches of the high Dracæna Terminalis."
